Rain Sensor Level RSL330

$29

This is just not a Rain Sensor Level to Equalizer®, its an item they've added to their Arsenal™ of Inventors. Blake Banning sent this idea under the Equalizer® Inventors Program and is now in full production and flying off the shelves.

This tool makes a level surface to prevent spillovers and helps you create a flawlessly even rain sensor pad. Just adjust the side knobs until the bubble in the level is centered. Then apply your gel - we recommend using SensorTack products GEL902 & GEL904.

KEEPING IT CLASSY

These tools are popular when working on older models with swing out windows and rubber gaskets. For all of our vintage lovers out there, let's keep it classy.

Rubber Gasket Cleaner

An easy way to get the grit, grime, old butal and shards of broken glass out of the tight spaces of a rubber gasket.

Locking Strip Tool

Select the tip that most closely fits the locking strip. Insert the tip into the rubber gasket and thread the locking strip into the eyelet of the tool. Now, work the tool around the windshield while feeding the locking strip into the eyelet. You can swivel the tip 90° in either direction. A curved handle keeps your hand distanced from the glass. Four different type eyelets will fit most rubber locking strips on the market.

Rope Insert Tool

Insert the rope flawlessly into the gasket groove. Set the glass and secure it by dethreading the rope for speed and efficiency on your classic installation.

Pin Removal Pliers

To remove the friction pin, open the jaws wide enough for the plier push pin to engage the friction pin. When reinstalling the retainer pin, swing the plier's push pin around until it is upside down and use the depression in the plier push pin to hold the friction pin in place. Start the friction pin and then use the plier pusher pin to push the friction pin into the latch.

Not just your ordinary toolbox...

The logo is a stylized, symmetrical emblem in a dark red color. It features a central vertical element that resembles a hammer or a similar tool, with a pointed top and a wider base. This central element is flanked by two large, curved shapes that mirror each other, creating a shield-like or helmet-like appearance. The overall design is bold and geometric.
